

Winter 2017 (Part Two)

Counting my blessings

I learned to drive stickshift in my dad's old lime truck, with my brave mother riding shotgun. As we bumped and bounced across fields, I recall laughing and mom joining in – although on reflection, it was probably for different reasons.

For me, driving a big truck brought a strong sense of empowerment with the fantastic thought that I could now drive anything on the farm as well as my brothers. My poor mom was probably laughing nervously to hide her terror (would we make it over that darn culvert?), or maybe she just couldn't help laughing at the bad driving. Pretty sure it was the terror thing.

Also pretty sure my dad had a dubious role in this. I bet he decided to risk the clutch in that beat-up truck instead of a vehicle he really couldn't afford to lose. He was just too good of a manager to jeopardize equipment unnecessarily.

I picture my parents afterward having a good chuckle together at my expense. I would love to ask them "Do you remember when...?", but it's too late to get the real story now. Despite second guessing their motives, this remains a fond memory growing up on our farm.

That old saying is true: you can't take the country out of the girl. I'm proud of my rural heritage and wouldn't change it for anything. You and I share this pride; I read it in your registrations, and hear it in your voices.

I've been fortunate to work with you and your families since my first day at the Ohio Department of Agriculture, back in 2003. We've shared stories, laughed together, and sometimes grieved together. It has been a great privilege getting to know you...which makes it all the more difficult to say goodbye as I prepare to retire on January 31.

My plans are to spend more time on gardening, genealogy, reading, travel, volunteering, searching for that 40s-50s Ford pickup of my dreams, and most importantly, family.

Here's hoping that the farm always remains in your family. My very best wishes to all of you.

Your friend,
Cindy Winegardner Shy

Honoring Ohio Farm Families

Carr - Sandusky County

Bob Carr has been busy taking care of the barns on his 1851 Sesquicentennial Farm with new roofs and siding. He is pictured above at age 88 working on his 100 year-old barn. Now 93, Bob is currently working to side his corn barn when the weather cooperates.

Groweg - Sandusky County

A 9/11 memorial tribute on the Wayne and Mary Groweg Century Farm honors two people from Sandusky County who lost their lives on that day. The barn mural was completed Sept. 10, 2016 by Scott Hagan, who also painted the state's Bicentennial Barns.

Thank you, Lisa!

A special shout out to Lisa Schott, managing director of the Philander Chase Conservancy, for overseeing the Historic Family Farms registration for the Mary Hall Farm, Knox County. Lisa worked with Kenyon College student Cassie Hudson-Heck to prepare and submit the documentation. The farm was recently featured in the organization's 2015-16 annual report.

Carey - Highland County

Heitzman - Putnam County

Congratulations to the Heitzman family for registering three historic family farms in 2016! Derek Heitzman helped register the family's Lucky's Eight LLC - Mabel Berelsman farm (1867), the Daniel Heitzman/Debra Martin farm (1890), and the Daniel and Jean Heitzman farm (1841), all located in Putnam County. Thank you, Derek!

Pepple - Hancock County

The Pepple family held a party in the fall to celebrate the 2016 registrations of two family farms. Michael and Susan own an 1870 Century Farm, and Jeffrey and Pamela own an 1848 Sesquicentennial Farm. Congratulations and best wishes to the Pepple family!

Dr. Robert Carey shared this photo of his family's newly installed Sesquicentennial Farm sign. The Carey family farm, owned by Bob and Lanasue Carey and Jay and Carol Carey, is 113 acres and was established in 1834.
